Why We Do What We Do

by Douglas Wilson

The resurgence of classical Christian education in our country over the last twenty years has been a great blessing. And yet, as with all blessings, the passage of time tempts us to take them for granted, which is another way of assuming “it has always been like this.” When a school first begins, the ever-present danger of having to close the doors helps keep the mind focused, and the mix of excitement, danger, bills, coffee, and adrenaline has gotten many a school through the first two years.

But at some point, survival is no longer the central issue, and the basic vision has been worked out. Everything seems to be going fine. The way it is in the school is “just the way it is.” And this is the point where we must remind ourselves why we have undertaken the task we have. Why do we do what we do?

Inertia can become the answer, but it is not the faithful biblical answer. Many institutions regard the need for their own continued existence as a self-evident truth. We should be here tomorrow for no other reason than that we were here yesterday. But this is not good enough. If we were unfaithful yesterday, we need to be faithful tomorrow. If we were faithful yesterday, we need to be faithful tomorrow. What does that faithfulness look like?

In the first place, we do what we do because God continues to give us children. As long as He is granting us the gift of children, we are called as parents to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord (Eph. 6:4). This is the most important task that God has given to parents, and it is a task that goes far beyond providing food and shelter. This passage in Ephesians is a far-reaching one—the apostle uses a word for admonition here that was a common word in the ancient Greek world, and it was a word with enormous implications. The word rendered as admonition here is paideia, and it means the discipline that enculturates a child into the civilization into which he was born. This means that, for Paul, a Christian paideia presupposes a Christian culture or civilization.

This is a central Christian duty, and on one end of it we find the basic Christian family. On the other end is a Christian civilization, which may be in various stages of existence. These things wax and wane. When St. Paul wrote these words, Christendom was centuries in the future. As we read them, Christendom is centuries in the past. But because the book of Ephesians is still the Word of God, and because God continues to give us children, we are responsible to continue to assume the task assigned to us. We do so in a position that is more like that of the first recipients of the letter than it was for Christians four hundred years ago. The Christians of the first century

Douglas Wilson is the pastor of Christ Church in Moscow, Idaho. He is a founding board member of both Logos School and New Saint Andrews College, and serves as an instructor at Greyfriars' Hall, a ministerial training program at Christ Church. He helped to establish the Confederation of Reformed Evangelical Churches (CREC), is the editor of Credenda/Agenda, and the author of numerous books on classical Christian education, the family, and the Reformed faith. He served in the U.S. Navy in the submarine service, completed a BA and an MA in philosophy, and a BA in classical studies, all at the University of Idaho.

were building from scratch, and we are rebuilding from the ruins, but we still have much in common.

This means that Christian families who undertake the responsibility of providing a classical Christian education for their children are, to steal a phrase from the liberals, “thinking globally, and acting locally.” We do what we do because God’s covenant purposes will not be fulfilled apart from the blessing of covenant succession being fulfilled. And that will not happen unless our children grow up into the same faith that we have, loving the same God we love, and teaching their children just as we taught them, generation after generation.

Other goals are fine, but we must not be distracted by them. “Getting into the right college,” or “landing a good job,” are all legitimate things, provided we do not idolize them. But we are tempted to idolize them when we forget the ultimate point. That point is the fulfillment of the Great Commission. The point is the establishment of the kingdom of God, on earth as it is in heaven. The point is to bring up Christian children to live as Christian adults, so that they can bring up Christian children in the same way.

This is not going to happen unless we cultivate, with a great deal of gratitude, a sense of history, a sense of place, a sense of community, and life together. All this means education. When we think globally, we have a sense that we are part of something significant. But we do not become starry-eyed ideologues. When we are simultaneously encouraged and overwhelmed by the enormity of the task, we turn from that prospect, and God in His kindness gives us a third-grader to help with the homework. The vision is broad, but the range of action is narrow—as narrow as your own family, or the children in your own classroom. The humorist P.J. O’Rourke once quipped that everyone wants to save the world, but no one wants to help mom with the dishes.

So the school secretary is doing two things simultaneously. She is rebuilding Western Civilization and she is pulling out a child’s tooth.

The Latin instructor is doing two things at the same time. She is restoring a cultural heritage, and she is correcting papers that did not conjugate laudo correctly. The administrator is doing two things. He is reading books to recapture a sense of how much we have left to do, and he is also trying to contact a local friend of the school to see if he can plow the snow out of the parking lot. God works with us in this way. We sometimes think there is a tension in it, but not really. After all, the ultimate Logos of the universe became a particular baby with ten fingers and ten toes. The Word became flesh and dwelt among us. Why should we not have to dwell among us?

And so this is why we do what we do. God has given us a vision of a renewed or restored Christendom, perhaps in a hundred years, and perhaps in five hundred years. But instead of sitting quietly, pining for the day when this might happen, God has given us days to fill with fruitful educational work in the meantime. And this is not busy work either. No one can quite tell how a redwood grows, and you can’t really watch it. But everything little thing contributes, and this is why the apostle can encourage us to know that this, our labor in the Lord, is not in vain. As Cornelius Van Til once put it so wonderfully, parents and teachers “labor in the dawn of everlasting results.”

The Christians of the first century were building from scratch, and we are rebuilding from the ruins, but we still have much in common.

Book Review

BY CHRISTOPHER SCHLECT

Ronald Mellor has collected a thorough, yet manageable anthology of Roman historical writing, and I recommend it.

Most history source anthologies frustrate me. Typically they present brief excerpts of 500 words or so, yanked out of works that would fill 500 pages if left unabridged, and represent them as adequate tastes of the past. Because such briefs are offered up as “primary sources,” they flatter less astute readers—it’s usually students who have to read these things—into believing that they are looking at a clear, un-tampered-with voice of the past. For example, I know one anthology that presents 1 Corinthians 13 as its “primary source” for Christianity, wrenching a great passage out of its context, leaving the hapless reader ignorant of Paul’s concerns about the Corinthian church. The passage comes off much different when read as God intended: following chapter 12 and preceding chapter 14. If it is problematic to read only little bits of the Bible, we should be similarly concerned about excerpting the Battle of Marathon out of the intricate weave of Herodotus’ whole tapestry.

On the other side, I sympathize with anthology editors because they are motivated by the plain truth that all teachers confront: students cannot read everything. (Neither can their teachers, despite our petty attempts to come across as though we are omniscient.) Whenever I assign readings to my students, I make the selections, and therefore, like an anthology editor, I control and spin their exposure to the past. But I will not hide the fact that this is what I am doing.

A good anthology is one whose editor understands not only the practical necessity for anthologies, but also their downsides. This is one such anthology. As a teacher, I simply do not have the time to work through the entirety of Polybius, Livy and Tacitus, much less Suetonius and others. I wish I did, but there are only so many hours in a scope and sequence. However, Mellor provides enough from each writer to allow readers to discern the writer’s purpose, priorities, methods, style, and frame of reference. He also gives enough to help readers appreciate why it is that these writers hold a secure place in the canon of “Great Books” in the Western tradition. Readers will not come away from this anthology with the misimpression that “I have seen Rome and know all I need to know,” but rather, “I have seen enough of Roman grandeur to realize that I know only a glimmer of its vastness.” There is nothing pretentious about this anthology, and thoughtful students will come away from it with a sense that they now must read all of Livy, all of Tacitus, etc. Anthologies ought to beget humility in the reader, not arrogance. Mellor has done that, and in so doing he has provided us all with a fine instructional tool.

Quid Novi?

CLASSIS is Changing

This is the final issue in this familiar format. Beginning in May 2007, CLASSIS will become a quarterly journal of articles and book reviews. It will normally be published in February, May, August, and November. All the classified ads will continue to be posted promptly on the ACCS website and will still be published monthly in a bulletin called the FORUM. That will be an electronic document only containing announcements and classifieds. If you are not currently receiving notice of its publication and would like to, send an e-mail to: elist@accsedu.org; type SUBSCRIBE in the subject line. As always, we welcome your bouquets or brickbats.

Emergency and Disaster Preparation

Several documents to assist you in emergency preparations are now posted on the ACCS website (Just for Members). These documents were provided by Earthquake Management. They also have a website which shows various products which may be helpful: www.earthquakemanagement.net. If you have questions, suggestions, or requests please contact: Sue Bonner (800) 925-9744 x 106, or sue.eqmgmt@earthlink.net.

Recovering the Sabbath

Announcing a new venture, Abondante Living, which intends to:

- Aid in the recovery of a right and glorious celebration of the Christian Sabbath—the Lord's Day.
- Provide ideas and products to break out of the disposable mindset and be more dedicated to "things that last."
- Provide free materials in the form of articles, menus, recipes, etc.
- Provide products that are intended to enhance your lifestyle as you seek to honor God in all things.

Visit their website: www.abondanteliving.com. Full disclosure: this endeavor is partially owned and operated by an ACCS board member.

Translating Recovering the Lost Tools of Learning into Hungarian

Helen Vaughan, former head of School at Caldwell Academy in Greensboro, North Carolina, is now living with her husband in Budapest, Hungary, as the Educational Consultant/International Ministries for ACSI. She has asked if ACCS can help raise $6000 for the translation of Recovering the Lost Tools of Learning (by Douglas Wilson) into Hungarian, and for the production of 1000 copies of the book for distribution.

Having served as the Head of Caldwell Academy for a number of years, Helen is strongly committed to classical Christian education, and is working to help establish such schools throughout Europe. This is an opportunity to help a close friend of ACCS promote classical Christian education in this former communist nation.

If your school and/or families associated with your school would be willing to help finance this effort, please send contributions marked "Hungarian Translation" to Caldwell Academy, Hungarian Translation, 2900 Horse Pen Creek Road, Greensboro, NC 27410. All contributions are tax deductible.

2007 Spoken Latin Seminar

on the campus of the University of Washington
Seattle, WA

Preparatory Sessions:
June 19–20

Main Seminar:
June 21–27

This Conventiculum Vasintoniense will be an excellent opportunity for practicing speaking Latin.

Most days we will take an excursion during which the participants, with the help of moderators, will not only chat among themselves in Latin but also describe in Latin everything they do and see. In the countryside and in parks we will discuss trees and plants, mountains and glaciers, rivers, animals, birds, insects, weather, and many other things. In the city, our topics will be all things urban: the arts and entertainment, buildings and transportation, the harbor and ships, business, shopping, books, clothing, sports, etc.

This seminar will be of special interest to those who enjoy the outdoors and/or the city and who would like to improve their Latin skills “kinesthetically” in friendly conversation while engaging in a variety of activities in a multitude of contexts and settings.

The application form can be found at:

Northern Kentucky

Cornerstone Classical Christian Academy: Are you, or someone you know, interested in seeing a classical Christian school started in Northern Kentucky? If so, please contact Cornerstone at nkyclassical@aol.com or phone (859) 760-5151.

Northwest Arkansas

Providence Classical Christian Academy, the first classical school in NW Arkansas, opened in 2004 with K-7th grade and continues to add a grade level each year. In 2006, Providence will serve K-9th grade students who seek a classical education that is distinctively Christian. Providence utilizes a university model schedule which allows students to register for classes according to subjects rather than grade level. For more information please visit our website at www.providence-academy.com or contact us via email at info@providence-academy.com.

Indianapolis, Indiana

New Life Community Church, on the northwest side of Indianapolis, is in the process of starting a classical Christian school based on the Word of God and in the tradition of the ACCS. We are looking for more interested families to join us in opening the doors of this new school in the fall of 2007. Please contact Steve Hawkins at newlifeccs@yahoo.com.

San Diego, California

The Cambridge School, San Diego, CA, is a new classical Christian school opened in the Rancho Penasquitos area of North County in September 2006. We continue to seek interested families. For more information, please visit our website at www.cambridgeclassical.org or email us at info@cambridgeclassical.org.

Greenwood, South Carolina

Heritage Classical Academy is forming in Greenwood, SC. Providentially, we will be opening in August 2007. Heritage is an inter-denominational, college preparatory school committed to a classical education through the use of the Trivium. We are a Christian (followers of Jesus Christ), covenantal (families at Heritage should seek to love what they confess they believe), classical (cherishing the Trivium as a means of learning the great Western tradition) academy of learning for the glory of God. For more information: admin@hcasc.org or www.hcasc.org

Traverse City, Michigan

Commencing prayer and process toward the creation of a classical school in northwest Michigan. Desire is to establish at least a PK-8 school, with possibility of PK-12. Full classical, Trivium model will be utilized. Facilities may be available during the first year at minimal cost. Classes may be full time or perhaps two-three days per week. ## N U N T I A T A

School Staff Hiring Resolution

WHEREAS the Board desires that all relationships among its members be honoring to Christ; and

WHEREAS the Board recognizes that at this time there are a limited supply of both qualified and gifted teachers and administrators available to teach and lead both the new and existing member schools of the Association of Classical Christian Schools (the "ACCS"); and

WHEREAS the Board does not wish to establish policy that would restrict free enterprise; and

WHEREAS the Board does seek to do all it can to keep godly peace among its members;

NOW THEREFORE, be it resolved that:

I. The Board will annually communicate to its members the need for exercising care and consideration of other member schools when hiring or attempting to hire staff from other member schools. This communication will encourage:

A. ACCS schools should regularly share and post listings of positions available with other ACCS schools, as well as lists of names of any teachers/administrators seeking positions.

B. ACCS schools are encouraged to primarily recruit applicants on the lists above, as well as applicants who may come to the school's attention by other normal means.

C. Should an ACCS school choose to recruit a teacher or staff member from another ACCS school, proper protocol would require notifying the employer prior to directly contacting the teacher or staff member.

D. ACCS members should apply the Biblical golden rule of treating others as you would expect to be treated.

II. The Board will seek to continue to develop teachers and administrators so as to assist schools in need of godly and gifted staff.

This resolution was passed 18 June 1998 by the ACCS Board of Directors.
